HANGING ON TO A childlike FAITH

Childlike faith is something that I love thinking about – let alone experiencing it. The excitement that rushes through your body and the joy that you feel in your heart is such a great reminder of God being your protector and provider.

I'm a grade twelve student so my years of school are coming to an end. I've honestly been upset about leaving it all behind and have been dreading it. I feel very vulnerable on the subject because it became such a routine; for the longest while I just couldn't bring myself to believe that new beginnings could be just as good as or better than past memories.

However, while talking to a good friend of mine and one of my youth leaders, I could feel that the Holy Spirit was there for every discussion giving me closure and hope which further leads me to trust in Him. It's both weird and scary to think about all the changes to come in my near future but the only thing that will never change will be Jesus as my rock because He is the most constant thing in my life. Even though I am getting older and maturing I will still receive Him with a childlike faith because I will always be his daughter and will forever continue to be fascinated by His love for all of us.
